Study in Berlin

As the capital of Germany with a multitude of federal institutions, diplomatic permanent missions and international organisations, Berlin is the location for significant political and economic developments in Germany and Europe.

Berlin is also the most important scientific centre in Germany with an unusually large concentration of colleges, universities and research institutions. Altogether, there are 14 institutions of higher education in Berlin, including three universities, four colleges of art, and seven universities of applied sciences.

The Student Service (Studentenwerk Berlin) provides rooms for more than 10 000 foreign students in its residential accommodations. Furthermore, Berlin offers a wide range of other housing possibilities at very reasonable prices.

Departments and central institutes

Department of Business and Economics

The Department of Business and Economics (Department 1) offers Bachelor programmes which usually combine a focus on business and economics with a wider integrative and interdisciplinary perspective. The inclusion of gender studies and environmental and sustainability issues are also important features of some of the programmes.

Whilst all programmes have certain international components most of the programmes are entirely international either in the form of a bi-national dual degree course or by being taught in English and by including compulsory study abroad periods. The Master-of-Arts programmes of the department are run in English or in English and French and share all a distinctly international outlook.

Department of Cooperative Studies

The Department of Cooperative Studies (Department 2) offers a total of 16 sector-oriented programmes with business and technical specialisations. The unique feature of these programmes is the combination of theory-based teaching phases and on the job-training phases.

The programmes are run in close co-operation with 650 partner companies which are also involved in programme development. After three years of studies the students obtain their Bachelor's degree and are usually offered a position by their respective training company.

Department of Public Administration

The Department of Public Administration (Department 3) has specialised in the competences required in administration and law. To effectively reflect this particular focus, the Department is divided into the Berlin Public Administration School and the Berlin Law School. Here, students are given the knowledge required to understand the administrative and legal context, shape administrative processes, and appreciate and evaluate legal issues. The academic staff supports students in the development of their communicative and social competences. Moreover, all Bachelor and Master programmes integrate gender issues and the dimension of a European and international perspective.

The expertise needed for a future career in public administration, non-profit organisations and the private service sector is provided in courses with a modular structure using modern materials and methods (including blended learning).

Department of Legal Studies

In the Department of Legal Studies (Department 4) prospective court officials and registrars study in an »internal« diploma programme for the wide range of legal tasks they will be entrusted with by the court and public prosecutors' offices in the federal states of Berlin, Brandenburg und Sachsen-Anhalt. The Department also offers the Bachelor of Laws degree in Company Law. This programme combines special legal expertise (including real estate law, property and real estate law of enforcement, insolvency law, mercantile, corporate and registry law) with business subjects, especially those in business administration. The advanced distance learning programme Custody and Guardianship imparts legal knowledge of guardianship and custodianship, teaches principles of economics and enhances social competences.

In addition, the Department of Legal Studies teaches the main degree course for the higher levels of the foreign service. In cooperation with the Department of Legal Studies at the Berlin School of Economics and Law (BSEL), the distance learning institute at the Beuth Hochschule für Technik Berlin – University of Applied Sciences also offers two part-time programmes: Certified Legal Assistant/Paralegal and Certified Notary Public.

Department of Police and Security Management

The Department of Police and Security Management (Department 5) offers a range of programmes for public, municipal and private sector security. A successfully completed police management degree (a BA from winter semester 2009/10) provides the basic entry requirement for higher career levels in the Berlin Police Force. To prepare students for a career in the senior service grades, the Department of Police and Security Management (Department 5) cooperates with the Deutsche Hochschule der Polizei (German Police University – DHPol) and the Fachhochschule der Polizei des Landes Brandenburg (Police Management University of Applied Sciences in Brandenburg – FHPol).

Over the last years, the demand for security services has steadily risen both within Germany and throughout Europe. As state tasks have been re-defined, the »private service sector« has been increasingly involved in solving local security problems, while the company sector is now also giving far greater weight to security concerns. The BA in Security Management, the only course of its kind in Germany, provides the skills needed for management positions in industrial, operational and municipal security.

IMB Institute of Management Berlin

The Berlin School of Economics and Law was among the first business schools in Germany to offer MBA-programmes through its Institute of Management Berlin and can look back on more than 20 years of experience in this field. The IMB's core competence is the MBA programme, and especially MBAs with different key themes.

The accredited MBA programme of the IMB with seven pathways aims to prepare graduates for leading positions in general management of businesses or in the healthcare sector. The IMB also offers several M.A. programmes and one certificate programme.

Institute for Distance Learning (FSI)

In creating the FSI, the Berlin School of Economics and Law (BSEL) has established one dedicated institute for its distance learning programmes.

Research into educational needs suggests that, as lifetime learning becomes the norm, there will be a ten-fold increase in the demand for part-time university courses. Here, distance learning will be a main plank – and the FSI already has successful programme designs. A learning platform provides media-supported E-learning while especially prepared distance learning material enables students to independently acquire the knowledge they need and the overall learning process is supported by face-to-face communication in blocks of lectures and seminars. Not only is this form of studying ideal for students working full-time, it is also widely considered the learning method of the future. The Institute for Distance Learning has also retained its focus on personally mentoring students.

IMO

The IMO is an interdisciplinary centre of competence for development and consultancy projects in the areas of modernizing public administration and reforming police in the countries of Central and Eastern Europe. The tasks of the institute include Central and Eastern European research as well as the design, the organisation and the implementation of international study curricula and further training courses in the context of the EU Lifelong Learning programme. Another important objective is the establishment and the support of scientific networks and mobility-enhancing co-operations.
